Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I strongly oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB). It is undemocratic and combined with anti-protest laws draconian.

Projects become political decisions that undermine principles of good planning and community participation.

It would give the minister too much power and the option to declare any development proposal a major project. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

There is no justification for this law or fast tracking powers.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project with no right of appeal or community input. This is not a fair or democratic process!
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Premier. The major projects legislation would remove any element of balance, fairness and democracy from planning decisions and must not proceed as it deprives your fellow Tasmanians of their rights.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
To whom it may concern,

I object to the proposed Major Project Legislation as I feel it removes power from the Tasmanian people and gives it into the hands of the state government without appropriate checks and balances.

Tasmania's appeal on a local, national and international level is that of an unspoilt, wild paradise, and that's the way we should aim to keep it. Removing the appropriate processes to vet planning applications leads to the possibility of projects which will impact this image and therefore our long-term prospects. Without appropriate input at a local level I am also very concerned about the risk of major projects conducted which will have major benefits for outsiders and minimal benefits for locals.

I accept that development will and should occur, but as those most likely to be impacted, Tasmanians should retain their right to a fair go when it comes to the approval or otherwise. Please reconsider this legislation immediately.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Fragrance tower development is grossly out of scale with the Hobart CBD and cultural landscape of the historic Salamanca and Battery Point precincts. The tower interrupts an appreciation of the dominant element of Mount Wellington which defines the Hobart skyline and frames the city on the western shore of the Derwent.

All developments should require adequate interrogation by independent and appropriately qualified individuals to ensure the unique character and cultural environment of Tasmania is maintained for enjoyment of future generations.

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I write to make a submission on the draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill of which I strongly oppose.

This bill appears to be an attempt to exclude the influence of any independent review of planning projects in this state.

-It aims to exclude the Tasmanian Planning Commission in favour of the Development Assessment Panel which does not meet the same criteria for true independence.

-It will give unreasonably power to the Minister to override all other voices including local councils.

- it is MAJOR projects in name, it allows for all planning projects in the state to be called "major".

It is in essence, a "Bill of Bullying" aiming to eliminate any voice of dissent (no matter how well founded or justified) and any need for consultation. It is the work of a government that finding its plans unsupported, (by independent review and the people who vote for them) will have its own way regardless. It is hardly the work of a democracy.

I do not support this bill

yours sincerely

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I agree with a transparent and honest process - I think it shouldn't be the loudest voices or most powerful that gets projects up. An example is the cable car project - it seems to be full of powerful people pushing it ahead despite most people not wanting it to progress with key decisions being made behind closed doors. An objective cba should be done taking into consideration the worth to future generations
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Major Projects Bill and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned. Allowing this to override all other processes is undemocratic and erodes the Planning Appeal Tribunal. Checks and balances and community input applying to the TPC have lead to community trust, when that body has been allowed to operate independently, with transparence and in an evidence-based manner. I have no such trust in a selected "Development Assessment Panel". Altering perfectly good legislation to provide fast-tracking schemes removing public appeal rights is undermining our democracy.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects:

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project:

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent:

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined:

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers:

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed:

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input:

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined:

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities:

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
No to the fast track bill. Protect Tasmania, keep it wild.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The balance is already too much in favour of developers. Don't shift it further to to one extreme. Leave it as is.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
There is far too much opportunity for dishonesty in the placement of members and the entire process is dictatorial
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill as I believe it is undemocratic legislation that should be stopped.

This legislation allows the government to remove projects from the normal local council planning process if it declares it a major project which could then be approved by passing by the councils, communities and Planning Appeal.

I think this bill would Allow the government to embrace all major projects thereby passing all the checks and balances that our democratic system allows.

The legislation subverts the Planning Appeal Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

We already have PORS and Projects of State Significance, why on earth do we need more legislation that denies our community And Other planning authorities their right of appeal.

We are not China, or at least I didn't think we were!
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

---

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

---

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

---

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the

Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am a front line health worker. I do not have time to write detailed submissions to try and secure basic democratic processes while there is a pandemic to deal with. The fact that this is being pushed through during a critical period like this is a disgrace. The levels of anxiety and fear that I am seeing in the population appear to be more about vulnerability in the face of radically increasing right wing political powers globally and locally, and diminishing citizen rights. Do not use a pandemic and human suffering to manipulate greater political powers. This way in which this major projects legislation continues to be pursued at this time highlights growing pubic sentiments.

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

-The Government has too much power when declaring major projects.

-Virtually any project could be a major project

-Current controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked

-Highrise buildings clause removed

-No right of appeal and limited community input

-Elected councillors will be side-lined

-Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

-Development Assessment Panels are not independent

-Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

-No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

The environmental vs. corporate interests debate in Tasmania is old and tired. The arguments of the 70s and 80s have not evolved but become entrenched while decades of research and science has only confirmed the horrors of environmental devestation, species loss and climate change. It is beyond a debate based on fact or science, it is uniquely about power and greed and this is clearly demonstrated in the timing, content and manipulation of this legislation.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
We elect our council to represent our interests in the local area. I have no faith that the minister, subject to influence by big business and developers, will do so. In the past we have seen projects approved that would negatively impact our environment, amenities and quality of life. I think the local councils are in a better position to judge the full impact of major projects than the state government.

In addition, projects that have been duly assessed and judged by local authorities should not be reassessed. This would make a farce of the original assessment and decision making process. The last thing I want to see in Hobart, in particular, are high rise buildings appearing willy-nilly across our skyline. I can fully understand the removal of any right of appeal - I would expect every project approved in this fashion would be immediately appealed by the voters that have been disenfranchised by this process. This is concentrating FAR too much power in the hands of the minister.

In short, I think this is an incredibly bad idea and should be stopped in its tracks.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am strongly opposed to the Major Projects Legislation.

Tasmania has reliable and long standing Panning Authorities and processes for dealing with panning matters. This system is not perfect but it is, for the most part, democratic and fair to all people who become engaged in a planning matter.

The Major Projects Legislation is undemocratic. It removes elected Councillors and appeals processes from the planning process and puts the control of future projects in one persons hand. This is something we equate with totalitarian regimes, not our society.

The Major Projects Legislation is vulnerable to corruption. Ministers and developers who attempt to who attempt to push projects through using this legislation will be subject to ongoing protests and backlash from the community. It will create cynicism, distrust and resentment that will filter through to all government activities.

You have asked the community to work with the government to ameliorate the consequences of the COVID pandemic. Please work with us, the community, to create a society that we can have confidence in and be proud of, or risk losing our goodwill and co-operation.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am completely opposed to the Minister, or any Minister, being the sole approval authority for these large projects that require careful expert assessment from a range of expert perspectives, which should have authority.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
It is very tempting in these troubling times to rush into decisions to get the economy working again. Major Project Legislation is an example of a short sighted solution. The checks and balances that exist in our processes for major projects have seen thoughtful and appropriate development in Tasmania thus far. There is an opportunity now to turn towards smaller developments that are wholly Tasmanian based and owned. More modest projects that are in line with the Tasmania that we all know and love... We can chose a different path right now rather than continuing helter skelter down this path of overconsumption, pollution and ill thought out investment and development. Without due process and scrutiny major developments may become the next virus to sourge Tasmania.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am outraged . 25 yrs ago it was predicted that tourism would lead our economy.

People have flocked here to specifically see our wilderness, bolstering all other tourism.

To offer up National Park's to private enterprise goes against EVERYTHING they represent.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

THE GOVERNMENT HAS TOO MUCH POWER WHEN DECLARING MAJOR PROJECTS

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

VIRTUALLY ANY PROJECT COULD BE A MAJOR PROJECT

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

DEVELOPMENT ASSESSMENT PANELS ARE NOT INDEPENDENT

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

INDEPENDENT TASMANIAN PLANNING COMMISSION IS SIDELINED

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR MORE MAJOR PROJECTS OR FAST TRACKING POWERS

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

NO RIGHT OF APPEAL AND LIMITED COMMUNITY INPUT

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

YOUR ELECTED COUNCILLORS WILL BE SIDE-LINED

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

PLANNING SCHEME CHANGES CAN BE FORCED ON COUNCILS AND COMMUNITIES

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

DEVELOPMENT ASSESSMENT PANELS ARE NOT INDEPENDENT

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

INDEPENDENT TASMANIAN PLANNING COMMISSION IS SIDELINED

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR MORE MAJOR PROJECTS OR FAST TRACKING POWERS

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission

Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed Major Projects legislation, which I consider to be undemocratic, and should therefore be rejected for the following reasons:

* The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project, thus removing it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but would still allow the minister to disregard them since there is nothing that requires the minister to follow or adhere to them, only to "have regard to" them. This is completely unsatisfactory given the scale and impact of many of the projects currently due for approval. eg. Cambria Green, Halls Island/Lake Malbena, Fragrance Hotels in both Launceston and Hobart.

* The proposed legislation would allow any project that has previously been refused by a local council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could later be declared a 'major project' and potentially approved. This shows complete disregard for the environmental, cultural and heritage criteria and characteristics particular to individual councils for land use in their regions. This would greatly reduce the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

* The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are too broad leaving them open to interpretation by the minister, enabling the approval of virtually any potentially controversial project, large or small. with minimal scrutiny as to the impacts it might have on communities, existing businesses, or health and wellbeing of people.

* All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast-tracked. These include: Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the World Heritage Area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington and Mt Roland. The Skyway gondola cable cars project proposed for Launceston's Cataract Gorge, and recently unanimously rejected by the COL Councillors could well be re-visited under the Major Projects Bill. This would completely dismiss the concerns raised by thousands of residents, and show contempt for the considered approach councillors brought to weighing up the impacts (both positive and negative) the development was likely to have on this iconic Tasmanian cultural asset.

* Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft. This is unacceptable and provides an unfair advantage to developers over the concerns and rights of communities and individuals likely to be impacted.

* No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. This has chilling echoes of the Pulp Mill Assessment Act, legislation written by failed timber company Gunns Ltd, the pulp mill' project's lawyers, that removed the right of redress for any reason for individuals, communities or businesses that would have been negatively impacted by the mill. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

* Elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out. This is completely undemocratic.

* Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. For example the proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal. This skews the approval process too heavily in favour of developers, and is both unfair and undemocratic.

* Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

* Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person. This opens up the very real possibility projects will be assessed by people insufficiently qualified or skilled to make decisions on all aspects of the project, creating unnecessary - and possibly extremely expensive and irreversible - problems for the future.

* The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission. It would give the government of the day too much power over a planning process that should be totally independent of government.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

* No justification for more major projects or fast-tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast-tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS.

Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

I urge you to reject this extremely flawed legislation that fails to balance the respect due to individuals, communities, the environment, and our state's rich cultural history and heritage. It also fails to provide sufficient protections and safeguards for the conservation of our natural land and marine environments, and the wildlife that relies on them..
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The proposed Tasmanian Major Projects legislation is a totally unnecessary Act and goes against the principles of democracy. Tasmania already has a statewide planning scheme, which gives more power to developers than to householders, who no longer have protection for sunlight, views or privacy on their property. Local planning schemes (e.g. Sullivans Cove/Battery Point) have been developed to protect heritage or aesthetic values and history has shown us that the decisions made to protect these values have been correct. The proposal to augment the planning scheme indicates provision for projects that cannot be built under current legislation, and since the planning scheme is only a few years old, this suggests pressure from lobby groups to get unpopular projects through.

The proposed legislation seeks to prevent public opposition to projects, but any proposal needs community support and a social license to proceed. The complete loss of oversight by any statutory body that has not been appointed by the government, and the proposed ability of the minister to load any planning authority with candidates in favour of the proposal is concerning.

The Covid-19 pandemic has shown how fragile the tourism and hospitality sectors are in Tasmania, and without local support, any project will ultimately fail and be a burden on the community. Visitors to and new residents of Tasmania are attracted by evidence of our colonial history; by the low profile of our cities and potential to see the skyline without the obstruction of high rise buildings; and by our “clean and green” image. However, is a thin veneer which can be destroyed by inappropriate developments. Our cities should not be clones of every other city in the country.

Rather than supporting large developments, with the potential to further damage our image, the government should be focusing on promoting affordable housing. Tasmania already has a large homeless population, and the unemployment arising from the Covd-19 pandemic will force many more people onto the streets. This should be the priority, not promoting blue-sky developments for mates.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons:

Centralises power with the Government by taking away authority from current planning processes

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

The Government could declare any project it wants a 'major project'

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; proposed Westbury Prison; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission. The government is currently reviewing the Commission.

Tasmania already has adequate Major Projects Powers

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

Further centralization of powers with no right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Government Sidelining of local councils

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Tasmanians decide what is best for their environment, not the government. Politicians are elected to represent the people's views, not their own views, nor that of developers. I totally reject this draft Tasmanian Major Projects bill. It is a grab for power to make decisions by the premier and his cohort, which he/they are not entitled to make. The process has to be transparent and open for crtitique by the people, and the final decision is made by the people. There is no justification whatsover to forcing this legislation to fats track suposedly projects deemed "major" by any politician or group of people who benefit from the development, and could imply corruption of the politicians trying to do so.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

I do not trust the Government to protect our environment - It has allowed logging of old growth forests by the forestry industry, polluting of our waterways by the fish farming industry. At this time more than ever we need powers to protect our forests, our waterways, our wilderness. Once gone, it cannot be brought back, and the values of these things are never taken into account in the balance sheets.

After the corona virus is over , we need to emerge from the economic lock down with new values - a new sense of what is essential and what is not, a new sense of what will improve our society and what will not. Money for money sake must not be the over-riding principal. Job creation is also not sufficient justification.

The forestry industry has been subsidised by about $20 million a year over the last 20 years - this money could have been much better spent. I propose a universal basic income instead of jobs that destroy that which is precious and life giving.

Yours sincerely

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I was born in dunalley and grew up in Bellerive and I do not want to see dodgy developers, especially Chinese, run rampant in Tasmania like they have been in Melbourne, all their profits go back to China
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I strongly oppose the MPB because it makes a mockery of the democratic process and actually abrogates basic principles of participatory democracy. Any government committed to democracy would never want to water down democratic safeguards. Yet that's what this Bill threatens to do by sidelining individuals and communities from the planning process, making elected councillors irrelevant, emboldening a minister with exceptional and incontestable power and to top it off not enabling anyone to dispute of challenge ministerial planning decisions. Surely the power imbalance in this proposal is unhealthy? I fear that the drive to escape the current pandemic restrictions will see inappropriate development as if on steroids. It is clear we live in uncertain times. Now more that ever we should bolster democratic processes, not undermine them. I care deeply about this beautiful little island and its people and it seems obvious to me that when 'lockdown' is over it will be wild public places and spaces like our precious mountain Kunanyi and others that we will truly hunger for. Please protect our participatory democracy. It's the best we have.

Thank you, yours sincerely [redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
All stakeholders should have a right to review the developments that affect the wellbeing of the community. Overriding and excluding the voices is deliberate attempt for power and destruction. You need to hear everyone's opinion before making planning decisions. It's called respecting others. Even if it's annoying, we have the ability to see other points of view. Don't take lazy option.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Please protect the democratic process that we hold dear in Australia.

We must have a process that allows for all perspectives to be heard and weighed up.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This is my submission in regard to the proposed Major Projects Bill (MPB).

I strongly oppose the MPB on a number of grounds. Giving the Minister even more power makes the sector even less democratic, and more open to influence from the powerful vested interests of the corporate sector.

We need arm's-length independent assessment of all major projects to avoid politically expedient decision-making that unduly favours one sector over another. Reality and history shows the most powerful and wealthy have the most influence in government, so oversight of government is even more critical in this regard.

Here in the North West of the state, for example, we're under incredible pressure to pay the costs of UPC's transmission line which will destroy our wilderness and local livelihoods so UPC can ship electricity to the Mainland for its offshore shareholders. We, the community, are powerless, as State government pay millions for PR consultants to push this project through. We fully expect the State to declare it a Major Project in order to dodge even the minimal current requirements to observe environmental protections and community costs.

We do not need, nor want, 'fast tracking' projects that will trample the needs and rights of Tasmanians in favour of offshore commercial interests.

We need strong and independent assessment of all projects, especially with climate change, and mounting destruction of wilderness in mind.

I strongly urge that this MPB be abandoned.

Yours sincerely,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

- No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian major Bill (MPB) .

This undemocratic legislation should be abandoned.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am loathe to see the situation changed as it negates public opinion and makes the Government the decision makers on issues effecting the Tasmanian community. In a true democracy people must be able to have their views heard and due process must be followed.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Too much power is already in the hands of state governments, especially the authority to authorise "major projects". Councils must retain more authority to shape the development of their areas in line with the wishes of their communities. Certainly, neither of the two big parties that tend to dictate affairs right across Australia have demonstrated they are trustworthy or competent enough to shape our future.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The idea that one minister could have, essentially, total power on decisions regarding developments is anathema to our democratic society. The current system seems to work well enough since each side of the political fence usually have an objection, which means it's falling in the middle. If this change were to happen objectors would be up in arms - with no provision to appeal or make submissions - and developers would be ecstatic as they could easily influence the minister with spin or, worse still, subtle corruption.

All Tasmanians are stakeholders in the assets of this state, and although we may elect a government on certain policies, it doesn't mean we trust them implicitly to make all decisions for us!!!

We need to keep a second line of defence in place to offer oversight on important issues and developments.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Major Projects Bill does not follow a good democratic processes. It gives government has far too much power, and far too few restrictions. This very much looks like an opportunistic move from the State Government to fast-track whatever proposals they prefer, without allowing for input from councils. The eligibility criteria are too broad and too open to interpretation. This is not good governance.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Our elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Please do not fast track the Major Projects legislation while we are in the grip of the Coronavirus pandemic. What our experience to date with the pandemic and how the government and the Tasmanian people have worked together should help inform decisions. A democratic response will be more powerful. What we are learning from this current crisis is that people matter, and our environment matters. Financial stability is paramount, however, not at the detriment of the loss of voice and damage to our environment.

What we have learnt is that we need our green spaces, our wild spaces and our unique community to feel grounded, safe and to flourish. We have done things differently, and we don't need to be like other jurisdictions or countries elsewhere. We do not need to grow up to be like other tourist Mecca's. Tasmania and Tasmanian's are unique, and that's why people will continue to visit and contribute to our economy.

We do not require a blank rubber stamp to make development work. We just require a thoughtful and community driven voice to develop within. Let's stop Developers telling us what we need and forcing their hand. Invitation only! Look for long term sustainability for the Tasmanian community, not short term gain and long term loss of community and environmental assets.

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I totally oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

1. The Government would have too much power when declaring major projects.

2. Virtually any project could be a major project.

3. All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

4. The Highrise buildings exclusion clause has been removed.

5. The proposed Development Assessment Panels are not independent.

6. There is no right of appeal and only limited community input.

7. Our elected councillors will be side-lined.

8. The independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will be sidelined.

9. Planning scheme changes could be forced on councils and communities.

10. There is no justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers.

Sincerely, [redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I strongly oppose the draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) fir the reasons to follow. I recommend on this basis that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

It would give the Government minister too much power when declaring major projects. The bill seeks to give the Minister the power to declare any project a major project under terms that are too broard and so open to interpretation by the minister. This then leaves projects able to be fast tracked in a process that takes away the oversight of local Councils and without the opportunity for public involvement and scrutiny.

This proposed bill will also do away with The Projects of Regional Significance process further limiting regional involvement.

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

This bill seeks to drive through what could be unpopular developments reshaping Tasmania in a way that Tasmanians do not want to see.

The clause for height restrictions in Hobart has been omitted in this draft so this will impact the way Tasmanians live without the ability for public concerns to be taken into meaningful concideration

A totally independant review panel needs to have oversight on any decisions made by Government in the planning process. doing away with the Independent Tasmanian Planning Commissions ability to have oversight and hand it to a Development Assessment Panel that is not independent or robust and sets a very low bar for responsible ethical development projects.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Tasmania doesn’t need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
What I've learnt about it makes me very concerned about the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill, and I wish to inform you of my disapproval of it.

My family for several generations since the 1800's, has lived and worked in the very immediate surrounds of Mount Roland. We love and care for this mountain in particular, and for the whole of our State's natural environment, and we want its proper preserving and protection. We know in the past there have been development plans for a cableway on this mountain. I have travelled overseas extensively and have noticed how easily over-development homogenises global tourist venues, in the process losing much of that country's own best values, especially their natural environments. I worry that this seems to be happening to our own very beautiful island. Only big business seems to get listened to. Small people's views aren't heard. Government seems to only heed the dollar argument. This draft Major Projects bill appears to be listening much less to individuals and Councils, groups that work hard to look after our publicly-owned areas, our National Parks etc, and other authorities that look after our natural heritages. I really want the environment to be protected and taken into consideration more. I do not want just a single person (for example, a Minister) to have final say on such important and sweeping decisions for Tasmania. Such power should be shared by properly seen processes, fair public hearings, and organised by a very independent expert authority.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

I believe that giving the minster total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process and is so obviously undemocratic. The land belongs to the people and that needs to be respected and priority should not be given to big business when it comes to developments that impact the community.

It is not clear what constitutes a major project, it seems that any project that is rejected by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could later be declared a major project. For example I am amazed that the government has gone to such great lengths to ensure the Lake Malbena project proceed this process must be made transparent as the Malbena project in itself is clearly not in the interest of the majority of Tasmanians. It would benefit the very very very few and the very rich and not even boost the economic development of the council within which it resides. There are many more examples I am concerned about including; the Fragrance buildings, Cambrian Green, the cable cars (Mt Roland!!! would be despicable - inconceivably stupid).

Tasmania does not need fast tracking powers. We need to project what is unique and special to our State. Tasmania is on the world's radar now and if we are not careful what we value and treasure will be ruined by short-sightedness and greed. I would like my generation to be remembered with fondness and gratitude by future generations. I live in Acton and am grateful everyday for the person who ensured that we have the Tangara Trail - this trail of public/community open space is valued and appreciated by so many especially in this time of Isolation. My point is that we must plan for the long term future and taking care of land will take care of the people.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
“I hold serious concerns about the Major Projects Bill and believe it entirely inappropriate to consult the community during a declared State of Emergency. I urge you to suspend consultation until the COVID 19 emergency and restrictions are over."
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I wish to express my profound concern about the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill. I oppose this bill for a number of reasons, all of which will have a significant impact upon the future of Tasmania. I am very concerned that the MPB will severely curtail the right of taxpayers/voters/citizens to have a say about the natural and built environment of Tasmania.

The bill will severely curtail the right of elected municipal councils to manage planning and respond to ratepayers. The bill will give far too much power to one minister and limit the rights of councillers and ratepayers to determine the future of their cities and municipalities.

I am particularly horrified at the prospect of fast tracking so-called Major Projects. Thankfully two previous 'projects of state significance', the Ralph's Bay hideous development, so totally opposed by local residents, and the disastrous Tamar River wood chip mill that finally ruined Gunns,, both failed.

I am very concerned that the previous high rise clause has been removed from the latest draft. Why?

It is vital that the Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is maintained and not replaced by a group of unknown expertise arbitrarily chosen as a "Development Assessment Panel". Who will this represent? Developers such as the Singapore Fragrance Group or the sole representative of the Cambria Estate? Clearly not professionals with planning expertise or environmental, or historical knowledge.

Why will community appeals rights be denied under the proposal? Why will the voice of ordinary Tasmanians be silenced?

Yours faithfully

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the draft Tasmanian Major Project Bill (MPB) for the following reasons.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project

Virtually any project could be a major project

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including

Development Assessment Panels are not independent.

No justification for more fast track powers.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities.

Regards
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The proposed Major Projects Legislation is a direct attack on the ability of Tasmanians to have a say on developments in our State. It follows on from the secretive Expressions of Interest process which is quietly handing over parts of our precious natural areas to commercial interests.

The Major Projects Bill should be rejected as it threatens our democratic right to have a say in the future development of our State.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As a LCC ratepayer I am implacably opposed to the proposed Major projects Bill. Although no system is perfect the current arrangements work well and allow community input and consideration of options. In my view the MPB will restrict input, reduce community power, and pass control to a small clique, or the minister,fostering decisions that may not be in the majority interests nor in the opti,um longterm interests of Tasmania. Major recent decisions have not built on existing strengths, have not valued the great attributes of the State, and will not be viewed favourably by future generations - we are returning to a mid 20th century exploitative mindset which is manifest through the MPB. It is possible to have harmonious, graceful and community supported development that is economically, socially and environmentally attractive. The nature and structure of the MPB will not foster such values. The logical and sensible arguments against this Bill have been well canvassed. The main lessons from the current Covid19 episode are to heed logic/science, value the basics of human society and the natural world, and to move the major primary focus away from blind pursuit of the $, to a more balanced/low key approach to change/progress. The MPB will Place Tasmania in an undemocratic $/profit driven spiral. Profit and balanced sustainable change, if it is necessary, are not incompatible. The draft MPB must be withdrawn, and state development reconsidered from a perspective of principles, values and with a long term vision in which the $ is but a part.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am appalled by the Government's attempt to bypass proper and thorough process by attempting to push through this legislation. Tasmania needs to maintain an open and transparent process for assessing all projects. Concerned citizens are rightly worried that significant projects might not be properly assessed for any and all impacts.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am very concerned about the draft major projects bill, which is designed to prevent community members from objecting to controversial developments. We are supposed to be a democracy. Bulldozing through legislation is not a democracatic process. Not all potentially money making developments are appropriate, and irreparable damage can be done to precious assets belonging to the Tasmanian people if given insufficient consideration.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned. It is adding insult to injury that you are continuing this legislation at a time when it is clear that the whole ethos of our way of living needs to be reassessed. To turn Tasmania into some sort of giant theme park, catering for mass tourism that may well be something of the past, is clearly short-sighted.

THE GOVERNMENT HAS TOO MUCH POWER WHEN DECLARING MAJOR PROJECTS

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

VIRTUALLY ANY PROJECT COULD BE A MAJOR PROJECT

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project. This is clearly a way to remove council powers and presumably is why Adrian Bold is so quiet these days.

ALL CONTROVERSIAL PROJECTS AROUND TASMANIA COULD BE FAST TRACKED INCLUDING – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge. This is clearly a path that developers will be seeking from day one of a proposed project.

HIGH RISE BUILDINGS CLAUSE REMOVED

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

NO RIGHT OF APPEAL AND LIMITED COMMUNITY INPUT

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy. I am so distressed to find myself living in a state, in a country, where democratic rights are being stripped from us at a ridiculous rate. I made Tasmania

my home because it was different, I made Australia my home believing that it offered sound democracy. Now I ponder my beliefs and silently weep.

MY ELECTED COUNCILLORS WILL BE SIDE-LINED

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out. Not only is this clearly undemocratic but it is at risk of covert manipulation, there have been enough scandals in the past to prove this very point.

PLANNING SCHEME CHANGES CAN BE FORCED ON COUNCILS AND COMMUNITIES

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal. If you don't have the good will of the community then you are creating an discontented, angry society. That is the last thing any of us want after the pandemic is brought under control, a sense of community cohesion is going to be essential at a time when money and jobs are scarce.

DEVELOPMENT ASSESSMENT PANELS ARE NOT INDEPENDENT

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government. Look back and review what desecrations have been avoided that this system would allow.

INDEPENDENT TASMANIAN PLANNING COMMISSION IS SIDELINED

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR MORE MAJOR PROJECTS OR FAST TRACKING POWERS

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

IN SUMMARY

My submission comes from an ordinary member of the Tasmanian community who is terribly unhappy with how this legislation is being pushed on us. Trust in the political process is in short supply and will take a massive hit if this legislation does find its way onto the statute books.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Submit proposals Under current guidelines sure. But this removes due process and any rights we have to raise issues, objections and we just had a major review of what is nest for Tasmania's future. Keep us wild and natural. Yes develop but within that framework. Pleas do not go ahead with this.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This legislation is unnecessary. I oppose the proposed legislation as it is essentially anti-democratic. Centralising power and reducing the ability of local councils and communities to have input into proposed major projects is unacceptable. It is disappointing to see that this legislation is being proposed by our Government.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I write to inform that I am opposed to the Draft Major Projects Bill (MPB).

The Bill importantly fails to recognise the legitimacy of the concept of a social licence. This Bill removes the political process of decision making away from the very constituency that gave it legitimacy in the first place. The Bill is frankly too broad in it's applicability and is likely to give rise to even more Supreme Court action to determine the appropriateness of a Ministerial action to so declare a Major Project under the legislation. Planning is a complex and legitimate concern for the public as we have witnessed it's expression of both Federal and State decisions that have had to be reconfigured and sometimes reconsidered such as the Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal or the Cataract Gorge Cable Car.

Our existing processes have shown time and time again that all matters are fairly, rigorously and publicly scrutinised within the existing frameworks right up to the Review Processes of the Tasmanian Planning Commission which publishes reasons for it's decisions.

I cite lack of appeal rights, over broad and indeed almost an absence of definition for a Major Project, sidelining of existing planning mechanisms and the lack of scrutiny on the appointment of Development Assessment Panels as sufficient grounds to reject these tenets and therefore the whole of the MPB.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I own a global business with offices in Hong kong, the UK, and the U.S. I was born in Burnie and worked in Hobart for many years. I am a landlord with property in Tasmania and I am planning on investing more heavily in Tasmania's tourism industry. I object strongly to any Government (Liberal or Labor) attempt to fast track any processes or legislation. Fast-tracking is a way of avoiding due process of checks and balances. Fast-tracking allows self-interest - of political, business, or lobby groups - to rise above the greater good. The State Government's current proposed Major Project Legislation is nothing more than a rort for self-interest by those who would seek to gain most by such a bypass of due diligence. There isn't a successful business on the planet that does not abide by due diligence in it's daily operations. Why would Tasmania cast aside checks and balances as it manages its resources? Any government that would propose or push through fast-track legislation of such a nature will not get my support. In fact, it would encourage me to actively campaign against it. And, contrary to what any government may think, fast-tracking sends a signal to businesses everywhere that the cowboys are in charge. That is not a message of strong governance, of a level playing field, or of a place that has rock solid investment protections. I would seriously consider taking my investments to other states in such an atmosphere. Government for the people by the people. Keep Tasmania for our future generations please.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This bill is nothing short of a grossly mismanaged power grab by yet another liberal government that does nothing for its people and everything to support its donors. This same Liberal Government has led to Australia being downgraded from an open Democracy to a narrowed democracy by stripping us of our right to peacefully protest, persecuting whistle blowers and restricting our free speech and this act falls nothing short of continuing along the same lines of taking away the peoples voice, taking away their right to protest and their right as a free citizen to the DEMOCRATIC PROCESS.

For the above reasons and those below, too, I FIERCELY oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB).

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Thank you for the opportunity to OPPOSE the MPB Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill.

This bill needs to be scrapped. The concentrated powers of any MP, without public appeal rights is to be avoided at all costs.

The Planning Commission needs to be empowered and resourced properly to fulfil it's role in all major projects.

The appeal rights are NOT to be stripped, especially for major projects.

Lets learn from other States, and not open the doors for more corruption opportunities.

Kind regards

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The state government's proposed Major Project Legislation would give virtually unlimited power to it to fast track any major project. It contains no appeal rights and no role for elected councils. This legislation would make the Planning Appeal Tribunal and Tasmanian Planning Commission quite irrelevant.

The legislation should be withdrawn or drastically changed.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons :

The Bill will remove approval of major projects in Tasmania from both Parliamentary and elected local government oversight and place approval in the hands of an "independent" authority responsible only to the minister. Since the minister is responsible for appointing the members of the authority, this potentially places power over the planning process entirely with the minister.

Since the decisions of the authority are not subject to appeal both members of the public and their elected representatives at both the local and parliamentary levels are effectively cut out of the decision making process.

This erosion of democratic process central to our system of government is entirely unacceptable and also breaches the principles of good governance.

Also the criteria under which the minister is able to declare a project subject to this system have been drafted in such a general manner that almost any application for planning approval might be subject to this system, potentially completely circumventing the existing planning process. These criteria MUST be redrafted so that even if the Bill is presented to Parliament, it is clear that the Bill can only be applied to projects which are truly of major significance.

Laws should be drafted assuming the possibility of abuse of power and minimising such risks, not on the assumption that those using the legislation will "do the right thing".
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am not happy with this proposed legislation in that it seems to be an attack on Tasmanias democratic system and seems to be an attempt to take the rights of the average person to have an opinion or to object to something that they feel is just not right. We just remembered Anzac Day, as did Mr Gutwein. Our for families fort for democracy and I feel I have an obligation to stand up for our rights. This legislation reduces Tasmanians rights in planning matters to nothing and is just not right. People have a right to be heard if they have objections. A classic example is the siting of the proposed Westbury Prison, where people other than the locals seem to think it is ok to build a prison in an Historic town. Wrong at all levels, does not tick the siting requirements at all and the gevernment seems hellbent on forcing it on a community where 80 per cent of the folks don't want it. This exercise has been absolutely ignorant of the local people and neither the council nor the government have been brave enough to poll the town of Westbury to see how the people feel. Lets see some democracy in Tasmania.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The proposed legislation is just another example of inequality in our government, where decisions are imposed on local constituents. I oppose it thoroughly. Local communities must be given the right to decide on development that effects them. Local communities will accept development that has their interests at heart and includes them as stakeholders.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
From what I understand about the proposed Major Projects bill, I am extremely concerned, as I live on the base of Mount Roland and very close to the proposed site of a possible cableway development for the mountain in the future. I really don't want it as it would badly interfere with my way of life, from increased traffic and noise from cars up and down Rysavy Road, besides taking away the natural beauty of the mountain.

Because I know that a lot of others locally and people from all areas of Tasmania share my love of this mountain in its natural state, it really worries me that ordinary people like us won't get a proper say if the proposal does come up, because I notice that whatever the new bill's process explains, in the end, it will all be up to one person's say, the Minister's.

Thank you if you could please not publish my submission or my details for privacy reasons.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Please suspend consultation on the Major Projects Bill until the Covid-19 emergency and restrictions are over. It is not appropriate to consult the community during a declared State of Emergency when members of the community are worrying about more immediate issues and find it difficult to become properly informed and to discuss matters.

Nonetheless, I submit the following.

There is no need for new legislation to cover large projects. The existing processes have allowed many substantial projects to be implemented.

Please withdraw the major projects bill for the following reasons.

It does not give the public (including community groups) adequate role or time for involvement in the development of the assessment guidelines, providing feedback on draft assessments or the ability to appeal decisions without going to the Supreme Court.

It does not allow elected local councils (our representatives) the right to reject projects.

It hands too much power to the position of Planning Minister. This is not a comment on the current minister, but a concern about having such power in any one person's hands, now or in the future.

It does not require that projects meet requirements under existing planning schemes or legislation, such as the Threatened Species Act or the Aboriginal Heritage Act. It even forces a planning scheme to be amended if a project is approved which is inconsistent with that scheme, opening the way for further developments of a similar nature.

It has a very low threshold for what constitutes a "major" project. It could just be that the minister was of the opinion that a council wasn't able to assess it and that it was likely to have significant effect. This could be true of cable cars, tourist developments in national parks or high rise buildings.

It is fundamentally undemocratic to remove a proposal which is very unpopular with the community and has a substantial potential negative effect from the normal planning processes and subject it to a fast-track approval process.

It could allow projects which have already been partially assessed or even rejected to bypass or ignore those assessments and be approved. This makes the existing Tasmanian Planning Commission and Planning Appeals Tribunal much less relevant.

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For many years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Please withdraw this legislation. It is antithetical to our democracy and sensible planning with community involvement in and support of development.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
It is essential to protect and enhance public scrutiny of major projects. I find this proposal abhorrent. If major developments are given easy passage, it will degrade our brand as well as our environment. This state has been heading in the wrong direction and it's time to constrain development, particularly in natural areas. Llistening to the experts, it would be better to restore naturalness where degraded and concentrate on enhancing resilience in the face of climate change, not reducing wilderness values by allowing accommodation construction and making core remote areas more accessible by mechanised transport to those who can pay.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The MPB would give the minister total power to override The Tasmanian Planning Commission, councils and the Planning Appeals Tribunal and therefore deem any unsuitable project one of major significance. In a democracy that appoints elected council members, supports the accredited role of the Tasmanian Planning Commission and the process of the Planning Appeals Tribunal it is totally inappropriate to allow an individual minister, of which ever party is in government, to override these existing and well functioning democratic structures.

The MPB would not address widespread community concern with inappropriate high-rise development in our beautiful state. The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding high-rise hotels as eligible projects, but this clause has been removed from the latest draft. The communities concerns should be paramount rather than the profits of a developer and particularly if the project is in foreign ownership.

To suggest that there be no right of appeal is draconian and suggestive of a undemocratic government. The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but there is no confirmation that this might not change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

In a newly post Covid-19 era when we are all nervous about how Tasmania in general and more specifically all our trusted small businesses and local residents will manage the economic downturn that has been thrust upon us, it is more imperative than ever to tread carefully and charter a moderate and locally driven recovery. Allowing the MPB to be passed would signal an authoritarian ruling government that is only interested in fast tracking massive projects for wealthy foreign owned developers rather than maintaining the current development structures that exist and that allow the voices of our community to express their ideas and concerns.

Yours sincerely,

[redacted]

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill - Submission

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

If this legislation had been available in the 1960s, Salamanca Place as we know would have been pulled down and replaced with modern buildings as the State Government of the day wanted to do. This is now a major draw card for tourists and an important area for the local community.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Governments' major focus is usually economic and without the input of the community, particularly specialist knowledge and community sentiment, some important considerations of a project may not be taken into account.

The Major Projects Bill would allow the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors would not have a say over approval of major projects.

Under the proposed new legislation Development Assessment Panels will not be independent. These members would be unelected and so the community would not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

If developers had planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensure it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. This needs to continue for major projects.

Under the proposed legislation planning, scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project could be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission would have to amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency.

With this legislation, the Government would have too much power when declaring major projects. It is not in the spirit of a democratic society.

Thank for your consideration.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I object to the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill for a number of reasons:

1) The term “major project “ is ill defined, with multiple interpretations possible.

2) Only one person, the Minister, is needed to deem a development a major project.

3) There is little allowance for community responses to potential projects.

4) Where are the appeal rights?

5) The draft bill appears to create situations ripe for undue influence.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project.

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation that the minister could justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked such as - Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal , cable cars in the Cataract Gorge and the Northern Prison proposed for Westbury.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The people of Tasmania should have a say in what projects they want and local councils then listen to all viewpoints. We cannot have a dictatorship type control of our State, as the State Government proposed Major Project Legislation is demanding. The State needs to be democratically run.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I completely oppose the Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020. I am opposed to any reduction or any significant change in current planning legislation and administrative arrangements. The current system of nominating Projects of State Significance (POSS), and their assessment by the Resource Planning and Development Commission (RPDC), has worked well.

I strongly suspect that the new legislation, if passed, would be used to rush through various controversial projects such as the Mount Wellington Cable Car.

Our current legislation relating to planning and development is too lax if anything. Contrary to popular myth, there are fewer controls on development in Tasmania (and Australia generally) than in most advanced countries.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Submission on the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission

Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I do not support the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned:

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process.

The Major Projects Bill allows any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a high rise hotels, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects.

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input.

This bill is a backward step for good Tasmanian planning and should be withdrawn in the interests of all Tasmanians.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I do not agree with the way politicians are talking up the Robins Island wind project, it appears that the voters do not have any say or input into major projects under the current legislation.

It would be a ttagic outcome if all decisions were made by red necks that want to cut down every tree, and develop every corner of the Island.

Please do not allow these people more power, it would be a tradegy for our clean green image.

I am not in favour of the push to turn the Tarkine Coast into the Turbine Coast.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient che

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved bhhy Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects have process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I have been made aware of impending government legislation relating to Land Use Planning Permission draft bill.

Some questions arise in my mind.

1. What is the motivation & justificationof the proposed legislation compared to a system that has been working successfully for many years?

2.Why was the proposed legislation released for public discussion at a time when public meetings have been restricted due to COVID 19 ?

3.How do Local Councils feel about this situation as it takes away their "local knowledge? They are also isolated so it is impossble to obtain their comments.

4.Will local businesses ,either overtly or covertly,have acsess to the "development assessment panel"?

This appears to be an extremely closed government exercise -very reminisent of "Yes,Minister".

Please forgive my cyniscism but I cannot & will not support this type of action being foist upon the public. This is an abrogation of the demcratic rights of the proletariat & as such must be defended.

At the very least why not defer this till we are through this current health crisis.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

1) It would give the minister the chance to run rough shod all over local council and community planning.

2) It removes the right of local goverment acting on behalf of it's citizens and for it unique local make up.

3) There are no protections against corruption and bribery - as already evidenced in the past eg - the $1.00 sale of a lease to a public National Park island.

4) Short term kick backs from cashed up developers will pale in comparison to the long term damage to communities, potentially in all respects, environment, health, and existing industry.

5) Anyone could fall victim to this Feudal Land Lord tactic. Anyones property could be rezoned with the flick of the minister's pen, and be forced to move on, with little or no notice, no consultation, and most likely as a result - reduced compensation.

The Draft Major Projects Bill does not belong as part of a democratic society.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This legislation is not designed in a manner that is in line with the democratic process that is so crucial to ensure the people of Tasmania, and their elected council representatives, have adequate input into future major projects proposed for our state. I do not support this nominated panel having this degree of control over future major projects. The current legislation is worded in too broad a manner when it comes to that which might be declared a "major project" and, honestly, if any project is so fundamental that it needs rapid approval, it will be wanted by Tasmanians anyway - Legislation like this is not being written for Tasmanians. We already have in place legislations and bodies (such as the TPC) that DO look out for Tasmanians.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I'm opposed to the major projects legislation
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the proposed Tasmanian Major Projects Bill and I ask that this undemocratic draft legislation be dropped. The main reason I oppose it because it removes elected Councillors from having a say over approvals of major projects and it also removes the right of the community to undertake appeals against major projects. Time and time again we have seen that developers are interested first and foremost in power and profit, not what is good for the community. Although the Minister can veto a project it will rarely happen, and who knows who will be a Minister for Planning in the future? With power concentrated in a few people and elected councillors sidelined, the wishes of the community can be ignored and major projects foisted on them. I implore the government to adhere to the present Projects of Regional Significance. Tasmanians do not need or want this new Major Projects Legislation.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I grew up in Hobart, and my family are all there and I hope to move back. I hope for all Tasmanians this MPB does not get passed. Tasmania in all its glory needs to be protected by profit driven ugly projects that will do nothing for Tourism making it look like the ugly concreted mainland. Democratic processes must be upheld for the greater good of all ordinary Tasmanians and that protect the landscape and environmental health.The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Bill provides almost unlimited discretion to a Minister to declare a project to be be a Major Project, with no adequate safeguards in the form of criteria for such a declaration. Without any implication concerning the members of the current government, it should be pointed out that the potential for future corruption is high when the proposers of a project have a strong financial interest.

Apart from the curtailment of the right of a community to question developments that will affect them, the legislation fails to recognise the importance of local interest; for example, a project that may have little impact in the already degraded environment of, say, Hobart, might have devastating effects on another place, having regard for amenity, infrastructure, landscape and townscape values.

The legislation further empowers applicant developers against considered community representations. Unless lawful appeal mechanisms remain available and potentially effective in every case, there will inevitably be more recourse to civil disobedience.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Thank you,

Kind regards

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This bill is an attack on our democracy. We need independent oversight!
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Hobart, and Tasmania in general, have a unique character. Historical buildings and a low skyline with mountains and wilderness looming. To allow insensitive development, is to destroy what makes this great state unique.

At this point in time, there will be more temptation than ever to fast track development and bypass conservation and environmental controls for the sake of short term financial gain....and long term loss...loss of what matters for this state ultimately- its heritage, its liveability, its wild places.

We need more, not less oversight of development in this state. Well designed projects can be encouraged - those that will ultimately benefit this state and all its inhabitants, not just the pockets of a few, over non resident developers.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As an architect , with an enduring interest in the planning process and the future built and natural environment, I must oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill as a piece of undemocratic legislation.

I have seen other pieces of similar legislation in mainland states bypass community consultation, reasonable and open process in the name of economic progress at any cost. However in my opinion there are costs that are too high and the decisions in relation to so-called major projects are too important not to be made in an open transparent process with all the community able to participate and have their opinion and feelings both heard and taken into consideration. The proposed legislation does not allow for this process to occur and is open to, if not the reality then at least the perception, of undue influence of developers or parties with the short term profits in mind and little thought to the long term consequences either to the state the people or the environment.

if there is no right of appeal and a transparent process, the little trust we as a community have for government processes will be further eroded.

Development Assessment panels ,in my opinion, are open to subversion, coercion and (IMO) prone to pro development bias, depending on their makeup and the agendas of whatever party is in government at the time.

given that there is already a projects of Regional Significance process in place, I can only see this legislation as a means of sidestepping due open , clean and transparent procedure and trying to take the community out of any say in major projects that will have a long term impact.

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons:

1. It's undemocratic and I recommend this legislation be abandoned.

2. The Government of the day will have too much power when declaring major projects, giving emphasis to other underlying political agendas

3. Tasmanian political history has a well-known history of non-transparency & fast-tracking legislation at the cost of the greater good.

4. This process will only enhance an existing mistrust of our government.

5. Virtually any project could become a major project

6. No right of appeal and limited community input

7 My elected councillor acting on my behalf, could be side-lined.

8 Development Assessment Panels are not independent

9 Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will be sidelined

10. Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

11 No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

12. All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked

13. High rise buildings clause removed

14. Taking advantage of the Covid 19 "shut down" period while no-one can publicly protest in our usual democratic way.

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As an Australian I should and must have a right to say what happens in my back yard for myself and future generations. This legislation must not get through. Once again the liberal government is displaying a lack of care for those not rich or part of their old boys club. The timing is also totally reprehensible, when everyone is trying to get through this time we have a government trying to sneak through self serving dodgy legislation. It is time the liberal government developed some real ethics
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

Transparency and legitimacy is in the interest of all parties, but particularly government and potential developers. As Tasmanian history has shown, community approval does not necessarily follow approval, and numerous projects have failed after being rushed through due process. Changes, such as the Major Projects Legislation, would only heighten perceived bias towards big business, and invite suggestions of corruption. Governments would bear the brunt of community disapproval.

If a project is sound, existing conditions will pass them.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I have serious concerns about the Major Projects Bill and believe it is highly inappropriate to consult the Tasmanian community during a declared State of Emergency. I urge you to suspend consultation until the Covid 19 situation and restrictions are over.

While wishing to register my concern about the timing, I also feel deep unease that this process will take consideration of the Mt Wellington Cable Car Company's development proposal out of the proper processes it must comply with now, for example the Hobart City Council assessment process, and into an unaccountable and undemocratic process whereby a small panel appointed by the government can oversee and make the decision.

We must respect democratic processes and allow our elected councillors a role in planning decisions within their local authority area and make provision for widespread and meaningful public consultation.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The days of dodgy Tasmanian politics need to end.The sneaky deals and lack of transparency are not how a democratic political system should operate and this includes the current government thinking that they can grant themselves the power to cast aside normal planning processes to do as they please. Unbelievable!

The Tasmanian Major Projects bill is not democratic and must be thrown out.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
To whom it may concern,

I would like to make a submission regarding the changes being tabled for the State Planning Scheme, my objections are as follows. Virtually any project could be classed as a Major Project. All controversial projects in Tasmania could be fast tracked. Development panels are not independent and the process of choosing the panel is not transparent, plus the Planning Commission is sidelined. Projects do not have to be justified and the High rise Clause has been removed. There is no right of appeal for community and limited input. Elected councillors are sidelined and planning scheme changes can be forced on Council's and Community. We are a democracy not a dictatorship, there needs to be a fair and equitable process , with full transperancy.

Yours sincerely

[redacted]

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB)

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) and ask that this proposed, undemocratic legislation be abandoned for the following reasons:

- The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. Local councillors will therefore have no input on behalf of their constituents into the approval process of Major Projects.

- The Major Projects Bill can also potentially approve any project which has been rejected by a local council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal.

- Any Tasmanian Planning Commission guidelines can also be disregarded. The Tasmanian Planning Commission has operated as an independent, transparent and evidence-based organisation. The Development Assessment Panel will not have the same checks and balances as that organisation unless significant (unstated) safe guards are put in place.

- The Major Projects eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation that the minister can justify virtually any project as a Major Project.

- There will be no right of appeal by the community against the approval of Major Projects.

- A Major Project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency.

- The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with the PORS.

The above highlight the affront to the democratic process in that the normal checks and balances and local input for planning decisions can be disregarded.

Examples: - I am concerned with developments within World Heritage Areas and public reserves. The medical fraternity has highlighted the value (in a time where there are high levels of anxiety and mental illness in the community) of the community having access to areas where solitude from visual and noise pollution can be a valuable antidote to mental health issues. Desecration within World Heritage Areas (eg Lake Malbena helicopter impact) and public reserves (eg Cataract Gorge proposed gondola project and Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cradle Mountain proposed cable car projects) with projects that are fast tracked by the MPB will impact on the solitude of these areas. I have walked in all these areas and value the solitude there as an antidote to my anxiety.

- I am concerned that there may be a lack of due planning diligence for projects such as Cambia Green where I have already submitted an objection outlining potential issues with that project.

- I am also concerned with the potential to over-turn local council decisions of building height restrictions within sensitive areas of Tasmania's heritage towns and cities, with the high-rise buildings clause having been removed from the latest draft of the MBP.

Yours sincerely,

[redacted]

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am concerned about the Major Projects Bill and believe it isinappropriate to consult the community during a declared State of Emergency. I urge you to suspend consultation until the COVID 19 emergency and restrictions are over.

I am particularly concerned about those parts of the Bill that relate to the cable car and the Mountain. I think any development on kunanyi/Mt Wellington should have to comply with the Wellington Park Management Plan. Also, developments currently being assessed through a local council assessment process should not be permitted to have an alternative assessment done.

I would not like to see projects that have already been rejected by Councils be called by a Minister for a special 'major project' assessment.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
To whom it may concern,

I hold serious concerns about the Major Projects Bill and believe that it is deceitful and entirely inappropriate to consult the community during a declared State of Emergency. I seriously urge you to suspend consultation until the COVID 19 emergency and restrictions are over. Nonetheless, I submit that while the Bill has implications for communities all across Tasmania, ROCC is particularly concerned about those parts of the Bill that relate to the cable car and the Mountain.

Any development on kunanyi/Mt Wellington should have to comply with the Wellington Park Management Plan;

Developments currently being assessed through a local council assessment process should not be permitted to have a second life, called-in for an alternative assessment.

Projects already rejected by Councils cannot be brought back from the dead, retrospectively called by a Minister for a special 'major project' assessment.

Please reconsider the timing and content of this bill.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I hereby object to the introduction of the draft MPB on the grounds that it takes away ANY independence in the process of assessing projects that are 'declared' major and that would normally have community impact inputs. I consider the proposed process draconian and for any Government that would even ponder such a process, I would regard as untrustworthy.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As a Melbournian with three children living in Hobart and being a regular visitor to Tasmania I'm writing to express my fervent opposition to the proposed Major Projects legislation.

This is clearly a well trodden path for state governments across Australia as a mechanism to subvert the long-established protections for the community and the environment in favour of developers. For example, we have seen the destruction of beauty and heritage values under this template with the Barangaroo harbourside casino in Sydney which is a travesty of crass commercialisation, or the Melbourne Exhibition and Convention Centre on the Yarra. As a member of the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra for 30 years I watched the river become a narrow drainage channel between walls of high-rise commercial, residential and casino towers. The citizens of these cities, who are the owners of these iconic waterways, were unable to prevent this hyper-development as the approval processes were dramatically skewed in favour of the developer profiteers in exactly the way your proposed legislation will do.

Of all the issues that so many Tasmanians will be addressing in their submissions presently, the one point that stands out to me as a mainlander who looks on with trepidation at developments in Hobart and beyond is that as this legislation and the projects it is designed to facilitate have no popular, local support the electoral backlash will be fatal to any council, state government or federal government that pushes this through.

If you are assuming that the cable-car project, for instance, has appeal to a minority of domestic and international tourists arriving on the now-defunct cruise ships or flying in to see MONA, I can tell you that the great bulk of tourists to Hobart and Tasmania arrive hoping to experience a pristine and powerful environment untouched by crass, theme park rides and revolving restaurants.

You must know this. You must know that after these tourists have left it will be Tasmanians who will, at the ballot box, put an end to any council or government that has attempted to subvert their hard-won, democratic environmental protections with this legislation. And of course these issues reach across all the political divides. I know that the citizens of Hobart, regardless of party political loyalty, are so proud of their Derwent, their Channel, their astounding Mt Wellington, their pristine air and water. They never fail to tell me so, every visit I make.

I look forward to good sense and democratic decency prevailing on the this issue so that all Australians can continue to have enormous pride in the National Treasure that is Hobart and all of Tasmania.

Yours sincerely

[redacted]

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
We have an unique city that has managed to stay out of the clutches of developers (many from overseas)who's sole intention is to make as much money as possible with no regard for the public who live here.The government is supposed to represent the best possible outcome for its residents and future generations.Having travelled extensively overseas and witnessing the outcome of the current governments attitude worldwide,and the devastation it has caused to iconic structures and neighbourhoods,I would hate to see the same thing come here.

Local populations are the the best arbitrators for their areas, and are less likely to be influenced by big business and lobby groups.

To give power to often,poorly educated politicians,more interested in looking after their mates,with little interest in history,or social outcomes ,who are only in power for a short time,by any stretch of the imagination is not a good idea.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Due process, consideration and local government input is essential to developing sustainable and resilient projects in our state. Do not legislate against this.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The proposed Development Assessment Panel is unnecessary and undemocratic. This would give excessive power to the planning minister to decide which developments are declared major projects, with no consideration for heritage values, the environment, or the wishes of the community.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the legislation on the following grounds:

1.Similar legislation interstate has created undesirable development and loss of amenity for those living in proximity to such developments. There is every reason to suppose that paid lobbyists working for rich developers would descend on Tasmania and wreck our prized environment .

2. Such legislation invites political interference whether it be proposed with good intentions or not

Tasmanians want to preserve their small scale cities. Those moving here do so because of its nature.

3.Developers' bottom line is profit. We have seen already how many proposals were lodged by the Fragrance Group. All were outside guidelines. This legislation gives them a fast track to make money for them and diminish the values we hold dear for every one else.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
On the draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill , I strongly object to Major Projects Bill because any development can be added and the power of the Minister to decide is totally undemocratic . Virtually any project can be classed as Major? The Developers should not be pushing to override the processes already in place. This is why we have a Planning Commission and Planning Appeals Tribunal. Please no to fast tracking by passing this Bill. Community concerns are real and justified to be calling this unnecessary .
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
My wife and I [redacted] strongly oppose the MPB as it delivers absurd power to a Government minister, allowing the wishes of Hobarts' citizens to be overruled. [with particular reference to high rise buildings and cable cars].

The Legislation does not conform to a true democratic process.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Please do not reduce scrutiny for projects which will have complex implications for the physical environment. Especially in these increasingly uncertain times, short cuts in these procedures will likely result in unwanted consequences and irreversible destruction of our most precious resources.

The consequences of removing proper scrutiny may include an erosion of public trust in political processes as well as degradation of the environment.

The legacy of a good government should be legislation that we can look back on with a view that it was fair and has foresight. This proposed legislation runs the risk as being aimed at financially advantaging a wealthy sectional interest.

The Tasmanian natural environment is something that all Australians value. Please do not let greed and deliberate short sightedness be seen to have the ascendency in Tasmanian political processes.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Our democracy demands checks and balances in every area to prevent unscrupulous activity and to best reflect what is good and beneficial to the majority.

A powerful minority can affect the well being and integrity of our community whilst posing as genuine individuals and companies.

Tasmania has it all and we need to hang onto our specialness rather than be like everywhere else.

Please do not consider fast track legislation as desirable. It is not and will just assist those whose aims are based in greed and shallow ideology to wreck out beautiful island.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I seek to make a submission to the review of the Tasmanian Planning Commission. I am deeply disturbed about the draft Major Projects Legislation, since it will give the Planning Minister unchecked power to declare any developments as a major project to be fast tracked for approval by a Development Assessment Panel. This will exclude the opportunity for the community, local government councilors and non-governmental organisations to appeal any major development application. This model of fast tracking controversial developments will favour the profitability and greed of developers, with no oversight or opportunity for the public to exercise their democratic rights to assert community interests. Essentially this takes Tasmania back to the days of the whispering bulldozer Robin Gray!

I recommend that the TPC must

- retain its capacity to operate independently of government and free from Ministerial influence.

- retain its existing role to review and hold hearings on representations and recommendations to the Minister on state policies and amendments

- retain its existing responsibilities to assess projects of state significance and not undermined through the draft Major Projects Bill.

- be funded to continue to produce the State of Environment reports each five years.

It is critical for our democratic processes that the TPC maintain its independence.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Public Agencies must be accountable to the Public Interest.

The Development Assessment Panel makes the assessments and is alone responsible for the final planning decision for Major Projects. It is not accountable to anyone save the Tasmanian Planning Commission.

The Tasmanian Planning Commission alone appoints the DAP members.

Under the draft legislation, the community has no right to appeal the approval of a major project. My elected Local Councillors have no role in the approval or refusal of a "major project". These are surely the very projects which should seek approval from the people most affected.

There is no transparency around the decision making process for declaration of a "major project".

Councils must accept Planning Scheme amendments. Communities and the Tasmanian Planning Commission 'must' amend the scheme to fit approved projects.

There is already a considerable degree of opacity in the donations to the major parties in the State for election to State parliament. In the last election there were over five million dollars given to both Labor and Liberal parties without any details as to who the donors were.

There are very good reasons why "Developers" are prohibited from giving donations to political parties in other Australian states.

The proposed legislation makes the connection between politicians and monied influencers much more likely.

There is no transparency at all in the proposed process of approvals by the DAP. Local councils are the current regulators and they are to be removed from making decisions to approve or refuse a major project.

This legislation has no legitimacy at all. It devolves power to the Minister and a cartel of cronies with vested interests.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
With respect I request the Tasmanian Major Projects Bill include clearly articulated safeguards that ensure the citizens of Tasmania are clearly the major beneficiaries of a Major Project. Documented history and experience shows royalties (e.g. Forestry Tasmania) and similar payment arrangements supposed to go into the Tasmanian economy on behalf of it's citizens have been very inadequate. The vast amount of money derived from state Enterprises/major projects has benefitted individuals who have manoeuvred the project for their own benefit. I request the Tasmanian Major Projects Bill include clearly articulated safeguards that ensure the rate payers as citizens of Tasmania are clearly the major and direct 50% beneficiaries of a Major Project or it is to be rejected as not justified. Thank you for reading and including this submission.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Democracy is precious. People matter. Communities count.

Tasmanians ought always have the right to decide what kind of Tasmania we want to live in.

When communities clearly do not want a project, whether it be a prison, a cable car or Cambria Green, governments (of any colour), have no right in a democracy to ride roughshod over them.

Peace is precious. To quote Thomas Jefferson: "When injustice becomes law, resistance becomes duty".

For these reasons, I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Submission on the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

In the Tasmanian context government ministers have diverse and demanding portfolios each of which deserves careful management. It is always more prudent from a number of perspectives for a Minister to have expert advice and this is particularly relevant for this Bill.

From my point of view the most outstanding reason for rejecting this legislation is that Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance (PORS) process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Then, the Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them. Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal, when in fact, this is the expert panel needed for assessment.

To replace the expert oversight of the TPC by a Panel should require safeguards which constrain the proposed Panel appointees. At present the appointees must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission, but this aspect may be subject to change or when the review of the TPC occurs. There should be some safeguards to make sure that the Panel must report to government as well as the Minister and cannot act alone without the approval of the TPC.

From the point of view of the public it is entirely reasonable that all projects require the same kind of examination and justification as any other. The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

In the short term, long term problems may be entirely overlooked or dismissed and that causes community unrest. I have seen this at first hand with the Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal which is exactly the kind of project which may be fast tracked under this legislation. Public interest concerns were dealt with properly by the Southern Midland Council to the best of their ability because the interests of so many different groups were involved. Any Major Project needs to understand that public consultation and the advice of experts is an important component of any proposed development. Governments who ignore public concerns, and disregard proper consultation do so at their electoral peril and the judgement of history. It is possible that legal disputes leading out of these kinds of approvals may negate any time saved or processes bypassed.

The importance of public perception is often neglected or minimalised. The public is aware of possibilities of undue influence and potential corrupt behaviour and always alert to this in the local context. All projects of State significance affect local people.

It is absolutely necessary that any body which asserts to be an assessment panel must have the same checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission to ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years the TPC has maintained a high level of community trust. There is no need to substitute the TPC by any other mechanism.

In addition the public is well aware of instances where an established authority is being sidelined or reduced in capacity and can see the inconsistencies which are revealed by mechanisms that do not allow proper oversight. Nowhere is this more important than limiting or even removing the right to appeal. In this legislation the community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy. Community consultation and right to appeal are both important in the eyes of the public. It does not reflect well on governments who expect to have local and state support.

This is also reflected when local councils are bypassed. The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and then approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are un-elected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out. All panels must be responsible to the levels of government which they are replacing especially since it is the local councils which face community outrage. I point to the level of community outrage when a proposed prison was presumed welcome in Meander Valley. A decision made at a much higher level was completely out of touch with the reality of the local residents.

Similarly, under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. This is plainly undemocratic. Under this proposed legislation if a major project is approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. This makes a nonsense of the whole process and reflects badly on the government which puts such a mess in place.

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. This is plainly undemocratic. If a major project is approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. This makes a nonsense of the whole process and reflects badly on the government which puts such a mess in place.

Added together the last few paragraphs describe a situation which any member of the public could construe as changing processes which have worked in the past to favour developments which may not be in the best interests of a community or a region. Whether they construe such processes as indicating something to the benefit of developers depends on other evidence they may have.

It is difficult to see why the exclusion of high rise buildings has been removed from the legislation. Despite overwhelming evidence that the attraction of Tasmania is that it is unique in Australia by retaining its colonial appearance, lobbying to make it look just like every other city continues. Anyone who has travelled in Europe understands the considerable effort that various countries make to retain their built heritage and outstanding landscapes. Highrise buildings have no place in the Tasmanian small city landscape, and the examples which have slipped scrutiny stand out like sore thumbs. The earliest example of this was Empress Towers in Battery Point – still the most out of place building in the area. The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects and it is a retrograde step to omit this restriction.

In short, this legislation suffers from the appearance of manipulating the planning system to the detriment of the public interest, and bypasses elected representatives in the community in so doing. In addition it takes away the rights of the public to examine, to appeal and to be consulted about development which will impact on their everyday lives. It is undemocratic and retrograde.

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
For all the reasons outlined in the submission by the Tas Conservation Trust and Planning Matters Alliance Tasmania I strongly oppose this legislation for a Major Projects Bill. In Launceston we have an example as how sound planning principals are being thwarted. Here within 6 months of a Launceston City Council decision being over turned by the publically accessible Planning Appeals Tribunal, a project with very similar issues is being recommended for approval. Planning in Tasmania needs to be sured up to empower protection of what Tasmanian's value about their place rather than making approval process fast tracked and easier for outside and powerfully persuasive multinational developers.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I strongly oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned. My reasons are as follows:

* The Bill gives the Government too much power in declaring major projects - which are actually those projects likely to have the largest effect on the community and therefore those which require the most scrutiny and public input.

* No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

* Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

I am extremely concerned about this proposed Bill, and I ask that you take my views into account.

Regards,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]
[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Please do not pass this Major Project Legislation. It is not what Tasmania needs. We have a unique island which is still relatively unspoilt. I have lived and worked in places with rampant development, which has destroyed the natural and urban environments. Once these changes are made the sense of place and the very reason people were attracted is lost forever.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This 'Tasmanian Major Projects Bill Draft' is deeply undemocratic and needs to be opposed and rejected.

Any legislation that avoids public input and by-passes the permission of the elected representatives of the people, the local Councils, should not come into being.

If this legislation will be put in place we will loose our democratic right to decide about any future large scale planning matters.

So called Major Projects will have Major Impacts on our wilderness, our rural and urban environment and our quality of life.

Democracy is a fragile system and we have to be vigilant to recognize any attempt of power hungry minorities to undermine and eventually dismantle our so highly valued democracy. Please see the writing on the wall here, as history repeated itself many times before.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As a Tasmanian resident, I am very concerned at the major projects legislation which takes community planning out of community control, and removed independent oversight of planning approvals.

This leaves the way open for poor decision making and corruption, and disaffected communities who are lumped with developments that benefit others at their expense.

Slow and considered development has always benefited Tasmania more than projects that have been rushed through based on their 'economic benefits'.

I urge you to decline to pass this legislation and to think very carefully before concentrating power in the hands of a few.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for this reason.The MPB effectively gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process.The local council has a greater ability to assess the unique requirements of its local area and its citizenry without being pushed into a one size fits all template.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
No to fast tracking projects for your short term gain agenda to the detriment of the people long term. It is time to be doing the right thing by the communities you've been elected to represent and that is being patient, getting community engagement on these projects, so that the best decision long term can be made.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB). The State Government expects every household to focus on surviving the current virus threat, yet by pushing the MPB, it is exploiting our vulnerability. The best Government should do is defer this draft policy until November at the earliest when the people most affected by it are likely to have the time to properly consider.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Submission on the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am very concerned about this legislation! Under this legislation the Minister for Planning has unchecked power to declare virtually any development as a major project with no appeal rights and no role for elected councils in regard to final approval of a project.

This legislation is undemocratic. It takes away the democratic processes the community has rights to be part of.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
This is not a time to be pushing forward contacts without fully involving the community . We cannot aggressively force change that may be Provide only short term Financial gain but huge environmental losses.

Take time, slow down and consider The consequences For all a Tasmanians not just a few that get rich quick and a few short term jobs.

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Dear Sir/ Madam,

I hold serious concerns about the Major Projects Bill and believe it entirely inappropriate to consult the community during a declared State of Emergency. I urge you to suspend consultation until the COVID 19 emergency and restrictions are over.

A government should hold the best interest of the people in high regard and at present it is unclear what the future will hold for many people, industries and businesses and what the correct way forward will be. The potential for having or needing a new direction is very real and the major projects legislation displays not only disregard for the present situation which is not appropriate for any government but also a shortsightedness for the positive possibilities for the future of this state.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill for the following reasons.

I believe it to be undemocratic as it does not allow the relevant authorities as well as the community to voice their concerns or objections.

It gives the Government too much power if it has the ability to declare a major project thus removing it from the normal planning process and the councils.

Who decides what is a major project, some projects could be denied and this gives the Government the opportunity to move in and make the project a major one thus denying the public all our rights of appeal.

Our elected councils will be sidelined and the relevance of the Independent Tasmania Planning Tribunal will be compromised as their power in this situation is negated.

We have a credible system in place with PORS so why change it.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill for many reasons. This bill will give the Minister total power, it is not democratic.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
It is absolutely essential that all development in Tasmania is, and remains, subject to appropriate thorough assessment and evaluation without reducing the rights of the community to have input into the proposals. This is not the time to sweep away protections of environmental or community values. There are plenty of good, uncontroversial developments which can be progressed in Tasmania for the public good.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Tasmanian people don't need the proposed Major Projects Legislation.It has dangerous consequences where only a few people can make major future economic decisions.Our existing Planing Commission is democratic .We treasure it and council submissions as the ordinary Tasmanian can have their 'say'.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects.Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

I am particularly opposed to commercial hotel developments being called a Major Project when it is merely a moneymaking exercise for the hotel owner and we would be better served by multiple smaller operators instead of one big international branded hotel who will no doubt take their profits elsewhere.

Cable cars are old hat - and we already have one in Launceston across the Gorge. These days tourists want a more interactive experience, but we don't want the wealthy ones experiencing helicopter flights across the WHA and ruining the solitude for everyone else. People need to have the right to appeal whatever Councillors approve, not have their rights to appeal removed by this new Bill.

This Bill is undemocratic and is definitely a retrograde step for Tasmania or any democracy.

Please acknowledge this submission and I hope it helps the government to make a wise decision.

Yours sincerely,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB). The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process which is undemocratic. The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development without consideration or involvement of local community. Any project could be declared a major project and be fast tracked. The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy. The independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person. The Tasmanian community must be able to have a trusted avenue, Tasmanian Planning Commission, to contribute to its future development. The Major Project Bill denies their participation.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The unclean areas are increasing with developers not thinking of the terrain. People do no want filth and dying nature so soon the developer will be gone and Government will need to spend to repair. Think big. Don't allow our land and creatures be a consequence of greed and foolish thinking.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I think it is a disgrace that this gov't can even think this is a democratic move by allowing wealthy developers FREE reign over the current approval plan. The gov't are supposed to be there to represent the constituents and NOT the moneyed people from ALL countries who want to ruin Tasmania and it's beautiful heritage with hideous skyscrapers and other ugly glass box shaped developments.

Tasmania is the most beautiful state in this country and we cannot allow this to happen.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved.

There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Most importantly, the Highrise buildings clause has been removed from the latest draft even after community concerns.

It goes against our democratic rights that the community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input.

Development opposed by the community and planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities with local residents being gagged often by developers from outside our state.

Basically, this legislation stops the people of Tasmania from the democratic right to protect their own environment.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Under the proposed Major Projects law the Minister for Planning has unchecked power to declare virtually any development a major project.

The legislation provides a fast track approval pathway for any declared project, with no appeal rights and no role for elected councils. All the most controversial projects we are currently fighting against could go through this process and we would be helpless to stop them.

This legislation would make the Planning Appeal Tribunal and Tasmanian Planning Commission largely irrelevant as their decisions can always be overturned through the major projects fast track process.

If this fast track bill is made into law it will be a gift to cashed up developers who are looking to exploit our delicate and beautiful island.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects. This ignores the will of the people and is undemocratic.

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project no matter how ill founded and unpopular.

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers. This is clearly just a grab for power to ignore the residents of this state who have to fight so hard to try to preserve the lifestyle that we have here.

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed clearly ignoring community concerns

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input. This legislation is designed to be as undemocratic as possible.

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments GREATLY weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities who should have the final say about projects that ultimately affect these communities!

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities although the final decision should be theirs. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

The legislation subverts democracy and the people's right to choose the environment in which we want to live
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
In a democracy the people must always have significant influence on decisions that will effect the way we live our day to day lives and decisions that impact on the aesthetics of our environment. I can see no benefit in leaving this power in the hands of people whose primary goal is profiteering under protection of a government who supposedly represents its people and their wellbeing. The 'major project' legislation is subversion of my right to protect my environment. Why do we need special legislation? If it's a beneficial proposal people will support it. 'The people' are not stupid, and have far more invested in community than a business' or a politician's viewpoint.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As a citizen of Tasmania who cares about my local urban, suburban and regional environments, I am really concerned about the draft Major Projects Bill and I do NOT agree with it. The draft bill is undemocratic and should not proceed. Sufficient, fair and democratic processes for assessing 'major projects' already exist, and as far as I can see, work well.

The proposed Major Projects Bill is not necessary, considering adequate legislation already exists for this purpose, and a fair and representative independent body already exists to do the work required (the Tasmanian Planning Commission). The thought that the power would be taken away from the TPC and given to a non-elected body (the proposed 'Development Assessment Panel') rather than the TPC and RMPAT, would review 'major projects', and that the public, as well as local councils, would have no say or right of appeal, is just plain wrong. Let alone the Minister for Planning having such a proposed increase in power over decision-making on 'major projects' without proper community consultation or right of appeal. It is just wrong.

I cannot see that the draft Major Projects Bill and the processes under which it will operate will take community views into account in any meaningful way, instead leaning towards increasing private profit for a few wealthy developers.

I am fearful that the draft Bill will not get proper public scrutiny, as public meeting and gatherings to discuss such things are not possible under the current COVID-19 crisis which is occupying so much of peoples' minds at present. I see this as an undercover attempt by the Government to rush through this bill. If not stopped altogether, it should at least be delayed until the COVID-19 crisis is over and proper community consultation can occur.

It makes me angry that developers and private profit should be put before the interests of the public when the use of public land is being considered. If there is public outcry about a development, then by definition, there is something about it that needs an independent examination, taking all concerns into account. Categorising members of the public who want further scrutiny of large projects as 'greenie minority anti-development troublemakers', is too often used as a smokescreen for something NOT being in the public interest.

Controversial development proposals need to have independent scrutiny and decisions made on the basis of whether they are for the public good. Surely this is should be a mainstay of our democratic society.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I have great concern that the draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill limits the right of Tasmanians to object to any development proposals which the relevant minister personally decides to designate a Major Project, and provides no right of appeal. The sidelining of both councils and the Tasmanian Planning Commission, while at the same time giving so much power to the minister, is similarly most concerning. This undermining of the democratic process cannot be tolerated.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill as I consider it is totally undemocratic and gives the Government far too much power when declaring what constitutes a "Major Project." The Tasmanian Planning Commission and the Planning Appeals Tribunal will cease to have any relevance whatsoever, and community concerns will be swept away. Controversial projects involving developments in wilderness areas, skyscrapers in Launceston, Gondolas in the Cataract Gorge will all be deemed to be ""Major Projects "under this Bill, and the community will have no input and no right of appeal.

If this fast track Bill becomes law it will be a gift to cashed up developers who are looking to exploit our delicate and beautiful state; cities with architecturally unique styles, unspoiled beaches and pristine wilderness. The cities will be converted into replicas of Melbourne, or Sydney, with high rise on every street, eliminating mountain views and sunshine. Overseas tourists come here to see these places, because they are different and still exist. Developments in Wilderness areas increase the chances of them being loved to death by ever increasing numbers of visitors.

The Tasmanian Planning Commission has operated for 23 years in an independent and transparent manner and has the trust of the Community. Under the Major Projects Bill elected local councillors will be sidelined and developments - which may have been rejected by a Council, - will be assessed by Development Assessment Panels which are not elected and could be unfairly influenced by the proponent or the State Government.

This is totally undemocratic in fact it sounds more like a Dictatorship, as the people of Tasmania will be left with no rights of appeal whatsoever. If the government wants Tasmanians to take a pride in their state then it must allow them the right to have their opinions heard and considered
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am not in favour of too much power to the minister. It leaves us feeling powerless.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Besides the common points of submission listed below, I would like to recommend that each council is required to establish an office of The Council Architect (similar to how this works in Europe). This office would be responsible for evaluation and approval of design of all proposed development, ensuring best possible design outcomes within our cities. The absence of such office in the past has led to deterioration of quality and appearance our cities and places.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I strongly oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) as it is undemocratic legislation. Please note my reasons for opposing this Bill:

.....Too much power is given to the state Planning Minister who can deem any project a major development thus removing all local Council power over developments in their area.

.....The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

.....All the controversial projects that are currently causing a great deal of community concern in Tasmania could just be approved under the Major Projects Legislation without community or Council's input.

....The Development Assessment Panels are not independent. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel which may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government. The independent Tasmanian Planning Commission has served Tasmania well for many years and must not be sidelined now.

.....The Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission needs to be involved in all major projects. The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

....There is no justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers.

The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed.

....Why is the highrise buildings clause removed? The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft. Why?

....No right of appeal and limited community input. The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

.....Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

....Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities.

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Please add the points below as my device isnt cutting and pasting. Thanks
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Proposed Major Project Legislation is regressive. It removes power from local councils who know best what suits their area and what the local people want. To allow one man, the Minister, the power to decide what projects anywhere in Tasmania can be brought forward against the will of the people is utterly undemocratic. This is police state stuff, no less. And like police states it invites corruption. The governments or just minister's mates can be handed public property for their own personal enrichment -- and no doubt the minister's too. Massive Fragrance hotels in our CBD? And with ongoing problems with China we hand them an enclave on the historic East coast (No I am not racist, I have a Chinese wife). It is simply that Tasmanians are losing control over our own culture and heritage.

It was sneaky to bring this forward while we are distracted with corona virus. Shame
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I believe the Major projects legislation is not in the interests of the state of Tasmania. Due to its undemocratic, indeed autocratic nature, it is ultimately an unproductive step.

If it is introduced, news about will spread nationally and also internationally, leading to people who may have had an intention to visit the state to decide against doing so. People who have a respect for fair government have plenty of choices to travel elsewhere, and will therefore feel happier to boycott Tasmania, regarding it as being governed by people who do not respect some of the central tenets of democracy.

The short-term gain that may be won by a tiny minority if the Bill is implemented, will be thoroughly vanquished by the longer term loss of travellers who will treat the Tasmanian government with the disdain it would deserve for introducing planning procedures that do not sufficiently assess independent evidence about projects.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I have been appalled at the way the proposed Lake Malbena development by Wild Drake has been assisted through by the State Government even under existing legislation. The proponent Hackett has been quoted in the media putting about blatant untruths re Lake Malbena not being a core wilderness area. The proposed cable cars at Wellington and Cradle Mountain are of deep concern to me too.

Any legislative change to make things even easier for such developments to fast track is anathema to me.

While my principal spur has been threats to wilderness, I believe the same principals of not fast tracking must also apply to proposed developments in urban areas.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am not a member of the [redacted] but I believe it has proved over the years to be a highly credible organisation. I have read its case and I strongly support its opposition to the draft Major Projects Bill.
I'm a retired land surveyor and have lived in Devonport for nearly 50 years.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Prior to the current pandemic I worked as a tour guide in Tasmania for over 15 years taking visitors from interstate and overseas on historic walks in Hobart and to many places around the state. For several years I was a Visiting Journalist Guide employed by Tourism Tasmania.

Time and time again visitors would tell me they really enjoyed being here because it was different to the places they were from. Things mentioned were streetscapes, views from the waterfront to Mount Wellington, and genuine wilderness experiences. We don't want to be a "Mini Melbourne". We don't want "faceless experts" appointed by the government to decide our future.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I entirely disagree with the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill, it is my view that it ought to be abandoned immediately. The power afforded Government to declare a major project is too sweeping, removes from consideration the local Government agency that traditionally have ruled on such matters and who are in more intimate contact with the people that they represent and are thus in a better position to gauge public sentiment.

By usurping local Government responsibilities and providing a single Minister of the Crown with the powers there is a greater probability of and scope for "irregular dealings" with proponents of projects.

With the right political and other pressures it is clear that any project regardless of merit or its suitability could be nominated as a Tasmanian Major Project. This is unacceptable.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am unwilling to abrogate the planning laws in this state to vested interests controlled by supporters of the Liberal Party.

The Liberal party is only in power as a result of having the election bought for them by the Gambling industry.

This is not a mandate.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The neuter of the existing planning process via the MAJOR PROJECTS LEGISLATION is I believe a step towards AUTOCRATIC GOVERNANCE. The potential for LEGISLATED PROTECTION of fraud and disregard of appropriate managed sustainable development of all forms of Commerce to the detriment of all excepting the very few self interest persons &/or Organisations will exist. The MAJOR PROJECTS LEGISLATION is a DANGEROUS NONSENSE.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION ON THE DRAFT TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

Democracy would be eroded and Tasmanians will have to accept a planning scheme based on the developer having control of our built environment. Everything that a good planning scheme is supposed to have would be lost to bias of big development, with little influence of good environmental design that promotes a beautiful city.

I want Tasmanians to be proud of our built environment, where we protect heritage, and have suitable buildings, in appropriate locations that compare well with the best international designed cities of the world.

I do not want undemocratic second rate poor quality buildings in Tasmania, destroying every thing that is good about our Tasmanian built environment

.

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable.

Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path.

If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
In a true democracy all legislation should reflect the peoples right to oversight & the opportunity to resist development not in the public interest. This is especially true with projects & developments on publicly owned land & with development that adversely effects communities & natural values.

This proposed 'Major Project Legislation' ignores these prerequisites & should be resisted at all levels.[redacted]

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Although we can't and shouldn't be locked in the past we should respect the values of the place we live and keep control of who and what we are, avoiding inappropriate development which is essentially self-defeating and destructive of that on which it wishes to capitalise.

To retain control of development it is essential to have a multi-tiered planning system such as have served in the past. While not perfect, sometimes unwieldy and slow-moving, it nevertheless allows an essential measure of community input which would be lost under the Government's proposed legislation.

The value of community input was exemplified by the saving of the Franklin River, while the loss of Lake Pedder typifies the abuse of power which is essentially what is now proposed.

To be able to label just about anything a 'major project' is in itself certainly an abuse of power, and of process, language and ethics.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) because it entirely unwise, unnecessary and unsafe, and I recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I do not want the Minister for Planning to have the power to declare any development a major project. All proposed projects should be subjected to the normal planning procedures, including those imposed by councils, and should not in any way be made exempt from those procedures.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
SUBMISSION REGARDING THE DRAFT OF THE TASMANIAN MAJOR PROJECTS BILL

This draft Bill, in its intent and proposed implementation is fundamentally flawed and I consider it should be abandoned.

It is an erosion of the right of ordinary Tasmanians to have a say in how our environment is altered by others, especially where major developments are proposed by overseas corporations whose only motivation is profit. In a democratic country, why any government in its right mind would want to take control of the local environment from those who live there and hand it over to an unelected body is unfathomable. Parliament's role is to create legislation for the benefit of the Tasmanian population, and Government's role is to manage the State for Tasmanians in accordance with that legislation. The inappropriate developments that get foisted on us by uncaring developers are permanent; there is no going back. The damage to the Hobart landscape by ugly high-rise is already significant, and that without this this legislation in place. Local input to developments should be increased, not decreased.

The current planning system does have at its core proper democratic process to enable input by Tasmanians to proposed developments. These include the initial consideration of planning schemes and development applications by elected Council members, the opportunity for representation of interested parties and the possibility of appeal to RMPAT (although at the risk of significant cost) if the Council decision is considered contrary to the Planning Scheme. The Major Projects Bill clearly has at its core the aim of excluding local Tasmanian representation and introducing decision making by an unaccountable body, potentially biased to favour the Government's ideology.

This Bill gives the Minister virtually unfettered power to remove development applications from the planning system and hand them over to an unelected body. Worse, it leaves the door open for any developer with influence in Government, on having an application rejected as not meeting the planning scheme, to have it re-badged as a major project. The existing planning system essentially becomes irrelevant for developers able to influence the Minister.

There are already processes in place to evaluate projects of genuinely State-wide significance that has been used and seen to provide a reasonable outcome. We don't need new legislation that broadens out the scope of what can be declared to be a major project. The potential for this legislation to be used to approve projects that the Tasmanian population is clearly opposed to shows it is undemocratic and removes those impacted from the decision-making process. The potential for the Cambria Green proponents, Fragrance corporation in the Hobart area, the Mt Wellington cable car proponents and those developers aiming to privatise and profit from our National Parks to use this legislation to bypass proper scrutiny by the Tasmanian people should be enough warning to have this proposed legislation abandoned.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am writing to oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) because it denies citizens the right to legally object to a development that is inappropriate or which will benefit only a foreign owned company and not the residents of Hobart.

In addition the MPB gives power to an unelected panel and takes away power from the legitimate authority, the Tasmanian Planning Commission. This bill will allow the interpretation of what is a Major Project to be determined at the whim of a minister and then be accepted by the unelected panel.

To approve this bill would be to the detriment of democracy and planning in Tasmania.

Development in Hobart will be needed in the future but this bill is not the way to legitimately achieve it.

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill is one of the the most astonishing documents ever produced by a peacetime State Government in Australia.

A hundred years of carefully thought out planning laws established between State and Local Governments, thousand year old conventions of legal citizen assembly and protest to be banished at the whim of a newly appointed minister for 'Major Projects'?

And is this happening with the support of the people of Tasmania? N0! It is not.

The people of Tasmania hardly know about this unprecedented attack on their freedoms because the State Government has encouraged them not to examine the details of this proposed bill, and also because they can't support or protest anything at the moment because they are in lockdown with the Covid 19 epidemic.

That is why the State government is pushing this bill through now, as fast as it possibly can.

But is this moral? No, it is not. Is it sly and devious? Yes it most certainly is.

The State Government has caved in to pressure from large financial interests including JAL and Fragrance Hotels who see Tasmania as a fruit ripe for the picking, which will yield them enormous financial rewards if only the wearisome protections of citizens rights and liberties can be abolished overnight, under cover of an epidemic with the collusion of a compliant State Government.

How do we know this?' Its because the state Government has already published the list of projects which have had no planning or local support and have therefore been shelved.

The Gorge Hotel, the Cataract gorge 'Skyway', helicopters over lake Malvina, The Mt Wellington cable car. The State Government has already promised to add them to the wish lists of financially powerful corporations who are not fussy about whose laws they bend or whose people's rights they trample on, or whether they turn our beautiful cities into theme parks, and our unique wilderness into a wasteland.

It is time to put a stop to this. The Tasmanian Government should cease acting like lackeys and become leaders. The future is at stake, and it should be a future for Tasmania and Tasmanians, not for corporations foreign or home grown who clearly have no interest in anything except their own bottom line preferably in an offshore tax haven.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Under the proposed changes no park or reserve would be safe and communities would lose having a say in developments. It is important that the community remains a part of the process and can have a say.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
My family does not have a lot to say about the State Government's proposed Major Projects Legislation other than it concerns us deeply.

There are so many ways in this legislation, that the Government can give approval to a major development, although it goes against the general will of the public.

We feel the Government has far too much power when deciding on major developments going ahead in Tasmania.

We feel particularly concerned about developments in National Parks that are being proposed. We have no concerns about appropriate low impact development just outside parks, but definitely not in any park under any circumstance.

The world is in an environmental decline, lets not let Tasmania add to that decline. We have the best place in the world to live, we feel this Legislation will lead to Tasmania being just another degraded place in the world.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) as I am aware that the bill will allow for undemocratic power. If the Bill goes ahead and passes it will remove the normal and present local council planning process. Although guidelines may be produced by the Tasmanian Planning Commission the 'minister' only has to regard them and is under no obligation to follow these through.

Any project that may be rejected by a local council can or has the potential to become a major project.

Presently there are several projects that are being put forward and all of them have been rejected and / or redressed by the local government and various planning groups within the Government. Policies and Politics should be transparent...not could... SHOULD..

I ask that you take into consideration the appropriate planning avenues that we have presently and allow for the democratic process to take place THANK YOU
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the proposed legislation as I believe that any projects should be considered by current council planning processes by the council's that are elected by their constituents. Ultimately it is the council's and the constituents who have to manage and live with the development in their locale.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Reguarding the Major Projects Legislation , I am shocked that our democratic Government would be a party to a piece of Legislation that removes all rights from the very people who elected them. We do give our elected members freedom to make collective decisions for us but there is always the opportunity to question and object in a formal manner. This Legislation is not only about what is to be built and where ,it is the removal of the democratic right to object. Being elected to Government does not give you the right to trample over the rights of the community or to think you know what is best for everyone without at least asking and listening to what the community wants. Tasmania is shared by everyone let everyone decide if we want these projects or not.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Project Bill.

It is essential that the Tasmanian community have input into, and a right to appeal against, any proposed major project. Out State has too much natural beauty to be compromised in any way, by a weakened democracy.

Our local Councils are the voice of their communities. We do not want them side-lined by members of a panel who do not listen to the concerns of Tasmanians.

I have trust in the Tasmanian Planning Commission which, I feel, has operated independently and transparently, for several years. I request that this process continue and the proposed MPB be abandoned.

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

As a Tasmanian - a couple of generations ago - who is planning to return in retirement I am deeply disturbed by the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill.

Having helped protect much of Tasmania's wild country, now the basis of its fabulous tourism industry, it seems 'major projects' are like the HEC and become a power unto themselves with no checks and balances in the process.

Whatever happened to proper planning processes where all the players have a say and their perspectives, are, hopefully leading to the best outcome.

The idea that any project can be removed from proper planning processes is horrendously open to abuse. There appears to be no obligation to follow a proper process - and 'guidelines' are not proper process as they do not REQUIRE process, or standards, just 'have regard to'; a sort of "I looked at them, didn't like them so ignored them".

There is no reason, except maybe a war, or the health emergency we are currently in, to ignore proper planning with appeals and local council processes (after all local people have to live with and suffer the impact of a 'major project').

Tasmania is supposed to have a clean green image. This doesn't fit with that at all.

Yours sincerely,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I vehemently oppose this Major projects legislation. It is totally undemocratic and, by giving all the power to the Minister, it is WIDE OPEN TO CORRUPTION.

If a project cannot pass the Planning Commission, local Council and public scrutiny then it SHOULD NOT PROCEED.

The minister has neither the experience nor the mandate for this.

Please withdraw this insidious, Orwellian piece of legislation!!

Best regards,

[redacted]
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
All projects should follow the process where Local Council and its citizens get a say.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
As a concerned citizen, I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill for the following reasons:

- The Minister has too much power:

The minister will have total power to declare a major project. The Council in whose area the project will be carried out doesn't have a say in the process anymore. The project is removed from the normal council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission may develop guidelines but even in this case the minister only has to " have regard to" them and there is no need for him/her to follow those guidelines.

If a project was rejected by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal the minister can declare it to be a major project and, in this way, easily circumvent the existing democratic structures. This will make the Planning Appeals Tribunal fairly irrelevant. Such overruling seems to be highly undemocratic.

The guidelines to declare a major project are very broad and therefore allow the minister to justify virtually every project that he wishes to become a major project.

Fast tracking should not be undemocratic. Leaving out democratic principles can make a planning process faster but such a process belongs to a dictatorship, not to a democratic system! It is dangerous to remove democratic basic principles in legislation!

Also, community concerns that were partially addressed in the previous draft of this bill that excluded highrise buildings from becoming major projects, has been removed in this latest draft.

-No right to appeal, bypassing councils and the community

The community will have no right to appeal against a major project and will have hardly any right to have input at all. Having no appeal rights in the case of major projects is highly undemocratic! We – the community – have to live with those projects and if there are reasons to appeal a project it needs to be possible!

Elected councillors also will have no say when a major project will be suggested in their council area. This seems to be a very strange procedure, indeed.

-Lack of independence of the Development Assessment Panel and side lining of the Tasmanian planning Commission

There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel. It leaves the possibility open to unfair influence from the proponent of the major project and the State Government.

The Tasmanian Planning Commission has worked well for 23 years as an independent panel and many checks and balances were applied. This gave transparency to the process and the community had a high level of trust in it.

This will not be the case with the Development Assessment Panel which, however, will have the power to assess and approve developments. It seems very unlikely that the Tasmanian Planning Commission will have input into the assessment process.

Only the fact that the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission approves the development assessment panel members brings some safe guards to the process. However, as the Tasmanian Planning Commission is in a review process, this can easily be changed.

-Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

In the case that a major project is inconsistent with a planning scheme it is feasible that under the proposed legislation, amendments of the planning scheme can be forced on to councils and community. What a strange process. If there are planning schemes in place they have rules and are there for a reason, adapted to the particular council area. How can it be possible to overrule such an existing scheme? This feels very dictatorial and cancels out democratic principles. If a project has been refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, the Minister can call it a major project instead and all planning principles in place can be overturned. This is unacceptable.

-Why a new planning scheme?

Tasmania has Projects of State Significance (PORS) legislation. This scheme has check and balances and has served Tasmania well. Why change it?
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned. The Government has too much power when declaring major projects The Major Projects Bill gives the minister to

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I have serious concerns about the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill which I believe to be undemocratic. The Bill gives the minister complete power to declare a major project, removing it from the usual local council planning process. This potentially undermines the local government planning process. The Bill will also allow virtually any project to become a major project, thereby giving the minister power whenever desired. The clause excluding high rise hotels from the process has been removed from the latest draft. The community will have no right to appeal and limited opportunity for input which is extremely undemocratic and an abandonment of the principal on which our society has been built for the last 200 years. Lastly, the independent planning commission is sidelined and the development assessment panel is not independent. Very nice work for the minister if you can get it. Please show leadership and strength of character and stand up for the people of Tasmania and allow us to have a voice. Abandon the Major Projects Bill and work with the systems we currently have in place. They are working well to help preserve our wonderful state, and for giving our community a voice.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
The Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) is undemocratic legislation, and should be abandoned.

In giving the minister total power to declare a major project, removes The Major Projects Bill from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

Furthermore, there is no right of appeal and limited community input, elected councillors will be side-lined and have Planning scheme changes forced upon them and the communities they were elected to represent.

The proposed Development Assessment Panels are NOT independent and despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I am firmly against the Draft Major Project Bill (MPB) because of the extremely undemocratic nature of the Bill.

The power to decide on project approval would be concentrated in one small section of government with no allowance for community imput or checks and balances.

The MPB would allow the minister to bypass the usual local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission may give guidelines but the government could disregard them anyway.

Any project rejected by a council or the Planning Appeal Tribunal could later be given Major Project status and possibly go ahead.

The criteria for eligible projects is very broad and could mean just about any project could be given approval.

The MPB would allow for fast-tracking any projects that cause community concern or opposition.

The Tasmanian Planning Commission have guidelines in place to ensure it works in an open, independent and evidence-based way. The Development Assessment Panel is open to influence from project proponents and from government.

The independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing any project given Major Project status, the Development Assessment Panel will be.

The MPB doesn't allow for community imput or for the right to appeal. In other words they lack democratic procedure.

Also, the MPB lacks democratic procedure in that would allow for the chosen project to be taken from elected local councillors and given to the unelected DAP members.

In summary I am concerned that a a great deal of power will be removed from bodies of independent scrutiny and the allowance for community imput, and that power will then be concentrated in the hands a very small number of people with no checks and balances and allowance for community imput.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

This proposed legislation has been knocked back twice in Tasmanian recent (10-20 years) history because it is unfair to the people who the people elected are meant to represent, unnecessary, and the people who vote the politicians in don't want it.

The community want to see more community consultation from all levels of government and we want to see our leaders actually acting like they are coming from a place where they realise that we are living in the twenty first century and recognise the triple bottom line where social, environmental and economic values are considered equally; not like we are living in the eighties where the economic bottom line was the be all and end all like it was going to save the world.

We want our leaders to realize what that attitude has created and acknowledge the legacy we have in Australia right now as the country with the highest rate of extinction and threatened plant and animal species and we want our leaders to start acting like they understand this and do something about it instead of wasting our time with these nonsense legislations that are not in the communities best interests.

We want equality for all, the same rules for everyone, we do not want special rules for individuals.

we want the community to be viewed with the same value
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

Despite comments by the state government, the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission will not be assessing and approving major projects. All the power to assess and approve developments is given to a Development Assessment Panel that may include no Tasmanian Planning Commission person.

The only safeguard that exists is that the development assessment panel members must be approved by the independent Tasmanian Planning Commission but this could change after the government's current review of the Commission.

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

No justification for more major projects or fast tracking powers

Tasmania doesn't need more fast tracking powers. The government has not made the case for why new major projects powers are needed. The Major Projects Bill is intended to replace the Projects of Regional Significance process but no details have been provided about what is wrong with PORS. Tasmania has Projects of State Significance legislation which is a credible process for large and complex projects – and was successfully used to approve the Basslink cable. Highrise buildings clause removed

The previous draft of the Bill partially addressed community concerns by excluding highrise hotels as eligible projects, but the clause has been removed from the latest draft.

No right of appeal and limited community input

The community will have no right to appeal against the approval of a major project and will have limited right to have input. Appeal rights provide the community with an avenue to have bad decisions reviewed and removing appeal rights for major developments greatly weakens our democracy.

Your elected councillors will be side-lined

The Major Projects Bill allows the minister to take developments away from local councils and approved by Development Assessment Panels. Elected councillors will not have a say over approval of major projects. The DAP members are unelected and the community will not be able to lobby them or vote them out.

Planning scheme changes can be forced on councils and communities

Under the proposed legislation planning scheme amendments can be forced on councils and communities. A major project can be approved that is inconsistent with a planning scheme and, after the permit is issued, the Tasmanian Planning Commission must amend the planning scheme to remove any inconsistency. The proponents of Cambria Green may use this path. If developers have planning scheme amendments refused by the Tasmanian Planning Commission, they could go through the major projects process and have the Commission's decision overturned. The legislation subverts the role of the Commission in the same way as it subverts the Planning Appeal Tribunal.
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
this legislation must not happen. It can only lead to inappropriate projects for little public benefit at enormous environmental cost. It opens the door to wide scale corruption and leaves public consultation Local government input and environmental protection out in the cold.

Do not allow this legislation to be introduced
Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission
Sincerely

[redacted]

Submission to the Draft Land Use Planning and Approvals Amendment (Major Projects) Bill 2020
15 May 2020

Planning Policy Unit
Department of Justice
GPO BOX 825
Hobart,TAS,7001

To whom it may concern
I oppose the Draft Tasmanian Major Projects Bill (MPB) for the following reasons and recommend that this undemocratic legislation be abandoned.

The Government has too much power when declaring major projects

The Major Projects Bill gives the minister total power to declare a major project which removes it from the normal local council planning process. The Tasmanian Planning Commission 'may' produce guidelines but even if they do the minister only has to "have regard to" them and doesn't have to follow them.

Any project which has been refused by a council or the Planning Appeals Tribunal could be later declared a major project and potentially approved. Used in this way, the legislation greatly reduces the relevance of the Planning Appeal Tribunal.

Virtually any project could be a major project

The Major Projects Bill allows virtually any development that would normally go to a local council, from a subdivision to a pulp mill, to be declared a major project. The eligibility criteria are so broad and open to interpretation by the minister that he can justify virtually any project as a major project.

All controversial projects around Tasmania could be fast tracked including – Cambria Green on the east coast; the Fragrance skyscrapers in Hobart and Launceston; Lake Malbena Helicopter proposal and other developments in the world heritage area; and cable cars proposed for Mt Wellington, Mt Roland and Cataract Gorge.

Development Assessment Panels are not independent

There are many checks and balances that apply to the Tasmanian Planning Commission that ensures it operates in an independent, transparent and evidence-based manner. For 23 years it has maintained a high level of community trust. There are insufficient checks and balances on the Development Assessment Panel who may be open to unfair influence from the proponent or state government.

Independent Tasmanian Planning Commission is sidelined

